A STORY OF THE DAY.

Lamartine's Eloquence Sways a Mob of Parisian Revolutionists.

Paris in the Spring of 1848 was in a ferment. Louis Philippe had been dethroned and the reins of government were in the hands of the people. A mob ruled the city and only the firmness and wisdom of a few great men prevented a reign of anarchy. Lamartine was one of those who distinguished themselves at this time. "He not only swayed the Senate by his powerful oratory," says one of his biographers, "but turned mob mind under control the fiery spirits of 1848 mob. That was the grandest moment of his life when the infuriated crowd which surrounded the Hotel de Ville, recognizing in the poet-statesman its master, yet unwilling to be enslaved, clamored, with its 10,000 voices, for the adoption of the red flag as the future standard of revolutionary France. No man knew better than the historian of the Girondins the terrible significance of that cry, for the red had been the symbol of the reign of blood. Stepping forward boldly but upon the balcony of the Hotel de Ville and looking with the utmost self-possession upon the ruffianly and brutal faces some of whom were at moment aiming their rifles at him, in a voice so distinct that every one of the surging crowd understood the word, 'No, for myself I will never accept the tri-colored flag has made the round of the world with the republic of empire, with your liberties and glories, the red flag has only made the tour of the Champs de Mars, trailed pools of human blood. Vive la France!' Touched by his enthusiasm and led by it, the mob took up his cry and shouted, 'Vive la tri-color!' till they were hoarse."

INVENTOR OF BILLIARDS.

An Pawnbroker Invented the Game by Accident.

English are very fond of the curious game of billards, says the Paris Figaro, and a letter has been discovered in the British Museum which gives the date of the National sport. It was invented by a London pawnbroker, who was William Kew. Kew not only made money, but he sold cloth, and for purpose had a yard measure, with which he used to compute the amount of cloth, day, to distract himself, he took three round balls which are the basis of his trade—they may still be seen in front of certain shops in London, placing them on his counter, and he hit them about with a yardstick. He found it made a pretty game. He was a certain kind of skill in making ball glance off the other, and his friends who saw him thus employed called the game Bill's yard. It was soon extended into billiards. But the yard was the instrument with which the balls were knocked about, and the difficulty was what to call it. They called it after the name of the pawnbroker—a Kew.
